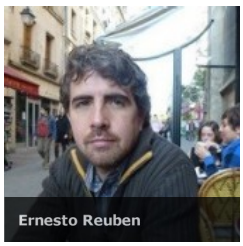
New experimentalists

The Social Science Experimental Laboratory is glad to welcome new experimentalists: Ernesto Reuben and John Wooders. They will join to the Social Science Division in Fall 2016.



Ernesto Reuben

"My main research interests lie within behavioral economics. In particular, I focus on the determinants of prosocial and antisocial behavior, the emergence and enforcement of social norms, the influence of interest politics, and the role of behavioral biases on discrimination."

John Wooders

"My research develops novel theory and combines it with data from the field and the laboratory to understand strategic behavior in games and markets."

Upcoming experiments

On February 15, 2016 Simon Siegenthaler & Aaron Kamm are planning to start a series of sessions of their new experiment. The invitations will be sent later this week. Interested NYUAD students will be able to register from their hroot accounts.

Collaborators from Italy

From February 1st to February 8th Prof. Rebecca Morton and Jonathan Rogers are hosting a group of student programmers and teachers from the specialized technical Sarrocchi institute, Siena, Italy. Professors Rebecca Morton and Jonathan Rogers, along with Eleonora Patacchini (Cornell) and Paolo Pin (Bocconi) have been working on a project related to social networks and voting. Whereas most existing social network research has relied on self-reported networks of friends, their project uses a specially designed social network program, created and administered by students at ITT-LSA Tito Sarrocchi, a technical high school in Siena, Italy. The first stage of this project was carried out in Siena in November. In February, a group of student programmers visited the NYUAD campus to process the data and begin work on the next stage of the research.
